The view of the Union Government, it is explained, is that titles are in conflict with the "spirit of the people" of South Africa and the policy of the Nationalist Party which at present is in power Considerable pressure has been brought to bear on the present Government to recommend the names of well-known industrial ists, and commercialists for inclusion in the honors list, but Gen eral Hertzog declined.

The Cape Times, commenting on the decision, thinks it one with which few will disagree, but adds that the suggestion to limit future recommendations to academic distinctions and decorations to civil servants is confining them to too narrow limits.

This loan has solved the financial aspect of the problem caring for the refugees. Mr. Howland will therefore be able to concentrate entirely on developing the mechanism of effectually establishing the 150,000 or more families of refugees that are still totally unprovided for are still totally unprovided for.

It will also fall upon him to properly adjust the distribution of the 1.000,000 additional acres of land evacuated by the Turks and recently transferred to the refugee settlement commission.

cently transferred to the refugee settlement commission.

Fortunately Mr. Howland will receive the heartlest co-operation from his fellow commissioners and from the Greek Government, as it is thoroughly recognized and appreciated by everyone concerned that the settlement of the refugees is the paramount task that confronts Greece, and that on its success depends the regeneration of the country.

It is up to the commissioner to so It is up to the commissioner to so assort these refugees as to give those who are accustomed to produce grapes and raisins lands that have been used for that purpose; to the rugmakers, looms and woof; to the fishermen, boats and nets; to the carpenters, chests of tools and houses to build; to masons and others, opnortunities for work. It is necessary to try to re-equip these people completely, so as to replace them in the old callings to which they have been accustomed.

of Tennessee, Virginia and North Carolina are in some ways superior to the Blue Ridge Mountains as a park, the latter's advantages of prox-imity to the centers of population and accessibility outweighed other considerations with the committee. However, the committee recommends that a second national park be established later in the "Great Smokles."

Through the co-operation of Virginia and possible donations from landholders, the committee thinks reasonable prices may be expected. The proposed park overlooks valleys where several Presidents were reared and where battles of the Revolution and Civil wars were fought.

and Civil wars were fought.

The mountains are heavily timbered and most of the forest has never been lumbered. A skyline drive over the mountain plateau at an altitude of about 3500 feet is feasible, according to the commit-tee, and if built would be "surpassed by few scenic drives in the world."

Mr. Temple's bill asks Congress to appropriate $10,000 for a commit-tee too look over the prospects of purchasing the land in question.

Despite Rink Handicap Yale Hockey Interest Is High -Nine Lettermen

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Dec. 16 (Special)—The Yale University hockey team will be laboring under a severe handicap this coming season due to the loss last spring of the Arena in which all games and practices of the sextet were held. Since the acquisition of the Arena two years ago, the ice game has enjoyed a tremendous growth, culminating in a championship aggregation last season. It is hoped that the high popularity of the winter sport will be more than sufficient to tide it over one year under cramped facilities inasmuch as present plans point to the erection of an artificial rink with all the modern equipment, which

Theatrical News of the World—Musical Events

The London Coliseum

to this audience that, years ago now, the Russian ballet first danced in London. These were the playgoers who, only last winter, set Edna Thomas, with her lovely austere singing of Creole melodies, on the pedestal that the small, select audiences had denied to her. And without the Coliseum audience we would not have, year after year, the greatest treat of all—Grock, the golden fool. And the reason for such success'

It is indeed something to know how to stand on the tip of a colossal stage all by yourself, and for 20 minutes so manage your movements and so distribute your wit as to enthrall the multitude before you. This is a chal-lenge indeed; all the technique of the theater must be at your finger-tips, and all the courage of the old theater-men whom society outlawed must be in your heart. Woe to the mummer who dares to mount the music-hall stage before he knows his trade. Under the pitiless shaft of the spotlight every untrained detail-an unaccented gesture, a swallowed syllable, a flabby posture, a flat thought— are sharp signs of incompetence.

But the playgoer's pleasure is to watch competence. We want to see our mummers do, better than we ever dreamed of doing ourselves, some thing that we really never dreamed of doing at all. For that is what we can see any week in any bill of Coliseum turns. For example that is what Harry Tate did recently in his turn called "Broadcasting." Harry Tate is one of the Coliseum's favorite funny men. He shows us how to do a number of things: "Fish-ing" are among his ing" and "Motoring" are among his of original genius that we regard it as one of the ancient data of thought—almost an axiom of the changeless possibilities of human nature. Nothing is clearer, as we scan the records of history, than the constant emergence of those great figures which we distinguish not only as "geniuses" but as "original." Most of us are aware more or less definitely of the widespread interest which the nineteenth century developed in the nature of the unusual intellectual powers which transcend what we describe as talent. But this study and speculation, we take for granted. a long-existing conception.

After a while he began to wonder what in the world had become of Polly May. He felt sure that he had been waiting under that apple tree an hour, and it was time she was time the rain was coming down fast,

Then, with his white robes trailing across the wet grass, and his own yard, but Muggins remembered that he was a prince and kept very still. A squirrel climbed up into the tree and looked down hrough the branches at him with curiosity. He chattered something, in friendly greeting, but Sir Lucifer paid no atention. There were birds flying about over his head. It seemed to him that everybody was having a pretty good time. He couldn't see that it was much fun being a prince after all. Princes usually did something worth while. He wished that he could.

Just then he raised his head and looked around. He could see Diana, Polly May's beautiful doil with the rosy cheeks and lovely light curls, sitting against the trunk of the apple.

hot water flowing under high pressure from your own geyser. A great electrical power company assures you the power. Terminal rates are at your command over two railway systems. San Francisco Bay is but forty miles distant by truck over paved highways. Fruit in abundance, quicksilver and ample deposit of clay suitable for fine porcelain manufacture are close at hand.

CALISTOGA'S industrial center is on a railroad and owners and employees have a choice of reasonable priced home sites nearby in valley or foothill.

CALISTOGA is an all-paved city. Paved and well kept graveled highways reach all points. Average rainfall 30 inches, average temperature 58 degrees, sunny days 250. Adjacent are vast mineral deposits, also clays of various kinds superior to those of Europe. California's climatic conditions admit of a saving of 32% in efficiency of employees, quantity butput, cost of construction and maintenance, light area, etc., over Eastern conditions. California possesses the most varied and ample supply of raw materials of any state in the Union.

COTTON GOODS MARKETS ARE SLOWING DOWN

Inventory Taking Affects Orders-Prices Ease-Fine Goods Slow

NEW BEDFORD, Mass: Dec. 16 (Special)—The annual period of inventory taking has had a decided slackening effect on primary cotton goods markets. The last week saw a slowing up, not only in print cloth yarn fabrics, but even in the fine combed yarn fabrics and the silk and cotton specialties.

Buyers are reluctant to take on further commitments until after the first of the year because of the natural desire to make their year-end condition look as favorable as possible. This attitude could be outweighed, of course, and would not stand in the way of placing forward orders now, if there were anything in immediate prospect to bring about a marked advance in the cost of goods after the New Year arrives.

Buyers could be induced to operate Buyers could be induced to operate now if it were made a real object for them to do so, but the fact is that the manufacturers have already taken sufficient new business, in the post-election flurry which featured the goods markets, to cover their current rate of output for some weeks to come.

Want Adequate Prices

While anxious to book more business, they are more insistent upon maintaining a reasonably safe price maintaining a reasonably safe price basis. They prefer to progress more slowly in the expansion of their out-put, rather than jump at once to capacity production on business taken virtually at cost.

capacity production on business taken virtually at cost.

There is good business in prospect, and the certainty of radically higher prices for woolens and silks is expected to divert considerably more consumers to the cotton goods counters. The trade is proceeding on the assumption of a steady expansion in cotton goods buying during the early part of next year, and manufacturers are devoting, their efforts chiefly to jostering what might be called a "live and let live" level of values even at the expense of volume.

Print cleth markets have been inclined to weakness without being actually reactionary. Southern producers have insisted upon resuming overtime work in order to reduce overhead, and their heavy liquidation of stocks a few weeks ago will enable them to ignore current sales volume for a considerable time.

Buyers See Overproduction

Buyers See Overproduction

Gray goods buyers have become convinced that the mills are fast riding to another overproduction crisis, and see real advantage to themselves in cleaying forward commitments.

Second-hand sales at sub-market levels, seemed to rule the trading centers during the week and there were sufficient offerings of first-hand goods cleaning that the sub-market levels, seemed to rule the trading centers during the week and there were sufficient offerings of first-hand goods cleaning that the sub-market levels in standard numbers at fractionally lower prices to encourage the big buyers to hold off.

Standard 38½-inch, 64x60s were traded in at 87s cents this week in second hands, and a few first-hand sales were made at approximately this figure, while the narrow 7.60 yard goods of the same count sold at 63.

come anywhere near meeting these prices, and even on the odd counts found the market very sluggish. Sales for the week were estimated at hardly more than 15,000 pieces, and the growing disposition of the manufacturers to reopen some of the idle mills was considerably dampened. Fine goods sales were also reduced.

Fine goods sales were also reduced, but the inquiry for this class of goods continued rather active. Broadcloths and pongees were moving in some volume, though by no means equal to what was done two or three weeks ago, while oxfords, venetians and both plain and fancy sateens were also receiving considerable attention.

Spot Trading In Lawns

Trading in lawns was confined chiefly to quick goods, and there was relatively little activity in organdies or in fine voiles. The growing difficulty in getting extra long fibred raw cotton has seriously affected the production of the constructions made from very tine yarns, because it has so increased the price which must be charged for them.

the price which must be charged for them.

The increasing pobularity of silk and cotton mixtures, however, has kept the market for such goods reasonably active, though the sales were retarded the last week or two by the very stiff prices quoted. These in turn were brought about by the difficulty in getting silk.

Particularly in the artificial silk, or "Rayon" has the matter of supply been giving trouble. In some cases it has been necessary for the makers of certain grades of Rayon to ration their customers, cutting down the orders on a proportionate basis.

Yarn markets, while not booming, have been fairly active, both in combed and chred divisions. Prices are very firm on combed yarns and not so firm on carded numbers. In several quarters of the market, heavy buying was "in the air," with the placing of the orders hinging considerably on a price consideration.

china clay producers have combined under the name of the China Clay Producers, Ltd., with the purpose of facilitating the distribution of clay to customers and to effect general economies. The china clay industry, in so far as it concerns Great Britain, is practically confined to a limited area in Cernwall and Devonshire. From there a considerable export business is carried on both to the Continent of Europe and to the United States.

The growth of the export trade has been such that not long ago it became necessary to enlarge and improve the facilities at the port of Fowey, Cornwall, whence most of the china clay is shipped.

STEEL TRADE CONTINUES TO FORGE AHEAD

NEW YORK, Dec. 16 (Special)offer the loan here, Speyer & Co.
pointed out that the British share, when offered for public subscription in London last week by Hambros & Co. was very largely oversubscribed, and the bonds are selling there now at a premium of about 4 per cent.

The bonds will be a direct obligation of the Greek Government, and will be secured by certain revenues, the return from which in 1924 is estimated at $22,355,000, or four times sinking fund requirements, and be a first charge on property of the refugee settlement commission to be bought with the proceeds of the loan.

DIVIDENDS

Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. declared a quarterly dividend of $1,50 on the common, increasing the rate from $4 to $6 the last week corroborated the many observations made of the sharp improvement in the steel industry. Outstanding was the report of unfilled orders of the United States Steel Corsease in two years.

The increase shown was larger than predictions. It had been reasoned that, together than in October, the rapid in crease of production would hold the gain down to 300,000 to 400,000 tons.
Steel ingot production for November was also announced. That was found to have gained 8 per cent over October, on top of a 6½ per cent increase the preceding month.

Inasmuch as there were two fewer mon, increasing the rate from $4 to $6

The annual rate of ingot output last month was 38,853,880 tons, whereas the first eather Company declared the regular quarterly dividend of 1% per cent on the preferred, payable Jan. 1 to stock of record Dec. 29.

Brooklyn-Manhattan Transit Corporation declared the regular quarterly 1% per cent preferred dividend, payable per cent preferred dividend, payable per cent preferred dividend, payable per cent preferred dividend of $2 a share, payable Jan. 31 to stock of record Dec. 31.

Prairie Oil & Gas Co. declared the regular quarterly dividend of $2 a share, payable Jan. 31 to stock of record Dec. 31.

At the middle of December the industry as a whole is operating at the rate of 80 per cent of capacity. It is probable that early next year full practical capacity will be attained, which of course is somewhat below theoretical capacity.

Genuine prosperity in the steel industry is more a matter of the future than the present. Though prices have been advanced from $2 to $7 a ton since October the great bulk of orders

DENVER OPENS KOA, 1500-WATT RADIO STATION

New Radiocaster Completes General Electric's Transcontinental Chain

DENVER, Colo., Dec. 15 (Special) -Most powerful of all General Electric stations, KOA, the new station in this city went on the air last night with a special opening program backed by 1500 watts of power which carried it into every portion of the United States. The mountain time section of the United States has been a void as for as high powered sta-tions are concerned and it will now step into the limelight.

With the other two powerful stations operated by the General Electric Company, WGY at Schenected. Company, WGY at Schenectady, Y., and KG0 at Oakland, Calif., this company now has a chain of transmitters across the country that will be able to transmit programs so effectively that all other stations could close and most of the radio enthusiasts would be sure of something in the way of a concert. Programs from this station will be given, for the present, three times a week, on a wavelength of 323 meters. An official reception is scheduled at the station Thursday

Cost $175,000

The new station's construction cost was $175,000, and the cost of maintenance will approximate $100,-000 a year. A staff of 20 members will be required to man it, besides a small symphony orchestra and a light opera troupe. Talent also will drawn regularly from Denver and icinity, it is announced.

The central location of the station means that radio fans anywhere in America may tune in with assurance of excellent auditory results. Use of radiocasting pick-up circuits will permit of the placing of public ad-dresses, concerts and the services of nany churches on the air.

The KOA antenna system is 120 feet long and 150 feet above the ground, supported by two triangular studio building is two stories in beight and contains a large waiting room for artists, a reception room, ageneral offices, a concert studio and generator grown for yow power house and generator room for ground and generator room for ground and generator studio. BRITISH SECRETARY OF STATE APPEALS FOR HELP OF RICH

GLASGOW, Dec. 2 (Special Correspondence)-Speaking at a lunchof the Scottish Unionist Association, Austen Chamberlain inter-preted the mandate of the Nation at Robert T. the recent election as one for the Government to make steady progress their constant aim. He and his colleagues assumed office, he added, "not boasting of a triumph, for our triumph will be, not at the beginning but, if at all, at the end of our period

Mr. Chamberlain urged that the well-to-do in the large urban industrial communities should take a closer interest in the life of the mass of the population. Coming as he did from another large industrial city he was profoundly impressed with the insufficiency of the service rendered by the better-to-do part of the community to the poorer districts of the city in which they dwelt.

in every great city, he ventured to say, the same few names were to be found recurring in almost every charitable list, on almost every public body, in almost every committee or organization that existed for the amelioration of the conditions of the city. A much wider field must be drawn from, and in the national interest they must make their own the old motto of their territorial apply it to the circumstances of today. aristocracy, "Noblesse oblige," and

The extremely moderate reply of the Soviet , Government to the announcement by Mr. Austen Chamberlain that the

The Problem of Russia

British Government did not intend to ratify the Anglo - Russian treaty drafted by the Labor Ministry shows how much lower is the credit of the Bolsheviki than it was. A year or two ago such an announcement would have been greeted by a torrent of expostulation and protest addressed to the workers of the world. Today there is so much discontent inside Russia with the failure of the Government to give prosperity to any class, and so much realization outside Russia of the defects and evils of the Soviet régime, that the attitude of the high hand is no

But that in itself does not solve the problem of Russia, which is certainly among the most difficult ones confronting the Western world. The real nature of that problem is usually overlooked. People talk a great deal about the economic fallacies of the rulers of Russia, but the principal menace of Russia is not Communism, but the system of political autocracy which Lenine created and imposed on Russia. Never in history has there been so complete a political despotism as that which exists in Russia today. The ruling class is not a monarch and a coterie of feudal lords. It is an aggressive party professing political convictions with the intensity usually associated with a religious rather than a political creed. This party, which is continually receiving fresh young recruits carefully taught the tenets of the Communist religion, holds absolute and supreme power in the State. We may discount a great many of the stories of atrocity which circulate in the West as being the propaganda of the "White" emigrés. But the fundamental fact of the absolute despotism of the Communist Party is un-

The basis of this absolutism is the peculiar indirect system of election employed by the Bolsheviki, which gives the Soviet leader complete control of the whole political machine. In addition, the central party executive controls not only the ordinary administrative services, but the judiciary, the railways, the major industries and all foreign trade. The Government also owns and controls every single newspaper, the radio, and the telegraph, and it forbids the entry both of individuals and literature and newspapers from abroad, except under the most careful inspection. The public expression of political opposition is ruthlessly repressed by banishment, exile, or execution for counterrevolutionary plotting, and the Soviet army, 1,000,000 strong, is the largest in the world.

Never before, neither under the Tsar, nor Bismarck, nor Napoleon, have the commonplaces of political freedom been so completely repressed, or the agencies for creating political opinion favorable to the Government been so highly organized. Soviet Russia probably does not constitute any very formidable menace to the rest of the world at the moment. The futilities of its economic policy still keep it weak. It is what it may become if it is not wisely dealt with by the West in the next few years that matters. It only took forty years for the ruthless Bismarckian system of autocracy and education to change the former gentle German, with whom the world was familiar before 1870, into the obedient disciplined tool of militarism which challenged the world to battle in 1914. How long will it take for the even more autocratic and militarist mentality of the Bolsheviki to turn the 130,000,000 docile, simple Russian peasants into a similar militaristic engine for the suppression of human freedom, unless the rest of the world awakes in time?

The menace can be peacefully removed if the civilized peoples realize the nature of the situa. tion which confronts them. The Russian problem cannot be solved by the sword, nor can it be solved by being ignored. Fundamentally it is a case of healing Russia of the illusions which have placed it in such aggressive antagonism to Western civilization. The greatest single contribution which the West can give will be to heal its own industrial system of the evils which make for economic unrest, for then and then only will it be able to go to Russia with authority, and convince its people that only by taking the control of their Government into their own hands can they escape the disaster which overtook Germany in the Great War, and make their way to the freedom and prosperity which they desire.

There is hopeful and no doubt reasonable expectation that, out of the deliberations of the national conference. on street and highway safety, held in Washington during the first two days of the present week in response to a call issued by Secretary of Commerce Hoover, there may come practical and workable recommendations which may aid in solving a problem faced by every community, large or small, in the United States. There have been previous conferences of this kind, but it seems that little has heretofore been accomplished beyond emphasizing, by an alarming showing of the steady increase in the number of preventable disasters on the highways, the need of stricter regulatory measures and their enforcement, and the necessity of the exercise of greater care on the part of motorcar and motortruck drivers and of pedestrians.

Perhaps it was necessary, as a preliminary to the discussion of methods which will lessen the number of these disasters, again to emphasize the need by assembling and presenting this array of statistics. But it is not by this means that the remedy is to be found. The great need is for the formulation of some really constructive plan of traffic regulation which can be impartially and arbitrarily enforced. It has been shown by recent surveys that many of those who use the highways will, unless restrained by the fear of arrest and punishment, violate every reasonable traffic regulation, thereby voluntarily assuming for themselves and those accompanying them the risk entailed, while subjecting others along the way to hazards against which they are unable to protect themselves. Secretary Hoover expressed the conviction that the vast majority of motorists are conscientious, careful and competent. Probably his estimate is correct, but the fact remains that the minority constitutes a terrible menace which must be dealt with. There are laws and regulations enough now, if they were observed, to safeguard both the motorists and pedestrians.

How are these reasonable regulatory measures to be enforced? That is the question which this or some future conference must determine. First of all, it would seem, there must be impressed the understanding that every violator of traffic regulations, if culpability is shown, will be punished. There have been too many "friends at court" who have connived to make possible the escape of the guilty. Too many have been able, through recourse to the law's delays, to prevent the assessment and collection of personal injury claims and the liquidation of property losses.

It is the irresponsible driver, aided and abetted by the careless or irresponsible pedestrian, who causes most of the trouble. Secretary Hoover quite correctly observes that the automobile is the "greatest development of twenty years, both economically and socially." He as wisely insists that if we wish for its fullest development we must reduce its terrors. It would be unfair, perhaps, to impose upon the cautious and conscientious users of the streets and highways the penalty of enforced speed regulation proposed by those who suggest making the roads uneven enough to preclude comfortable travel at a rate of more than thirty miles an hour, or the enactment of a law compelling the gearing of machines so that a greater speed could not be attained. The innocent should not be made to suffer for the offenses of the guilty. It is hoped that the present or some future deliberative body will evolve a method by which those who offend may be penalized, while those who appreciate and make proper use of the facilities provided may continue to enjoy them.

Even to the casual observer it has been made plain that there is a determination, inspired by those in high official circles of the United States Government, to stamp out the illicit traffic in alcoholic beverages. What that means, none know better than the violators of the law who have flattered themselves that they could continue to laugh at those who have threatened them with punishment. Many of the offenders against the law are men who, before prohibition, were engaged in the legalized manufacture and sale of whisky and beer. Even though they often succeeded in those days in evading the inhibitions laid down in city ordinances and state laws, they entertained a wholesome regard for federal revenue regulations. A few proved, for the benefit of the many, that it was futile to attempt to defeat the Government or to violate established federal regulations.

So strongly was this realized that it was many months after the date when the terms of the Eighteenth Amendment became enforceable before the more irresponsible of the former saloon keepers and bartenders mustered courage enough to undertake wholesale violations of the federal prohibition act. It required still more time for the brewers to gain courage sufficient to induce them to take a chance at manufacturing beer of an alcoholic potency greater than that prescribed by law. It is safe to say that, had there then been organized a determined campaign against this traffic, it could have been stamped out without great difficulty and at slight expense. The offenders, even though the contrary may appear, had a wholesome respect for the law. Probably they did not imagine for a moment that the campaign of nullification, begun by a few irresponsible bootleggers, could continue.

But the unexpected happened. Encouraged either by the sympathy or by the indifference of those whose duty it was to apprehend and punish them, they soon were able to snap their fingers at decent people and to laugh at the law. They have held high carnival. They have debauched government agents, bribed juries and prosecutors, and many walked out of court even when their guilt was proved beyond a doubt. Those who have observed this spectacle, repeated time and again, have marveled that such things could be. They have believed that an end must come to such practices, and now, after many long months, it seems that the hour has struck.

Public sentiment in the United States, encouraged and reinforced by the calm announcement by President Coolidge that the law will be enforced, has for weeks been gradually forming in support of the campaign which is now well under way. From many states there come gratifying reports of activity, supported or initiated by grand juries and civic organizations, aimed at the uncovering of conspiracies which have made possible the almost uninterrupted violation of the prohibition law. This movement is encouraging because there is every reason to believe that, with the support of governmental authority assured, and with the backing of a determined public sentiment, that measure of enforcement which was once promised will be realized. There is no mistaking the sentiment of the people of the United States toward prohibition. Millions of those who once were indifferent or were even inclined to oppose what they had been led to believe were sumptuary laws, have learned, by observation and experience, the great economic possibilities of a nation which has rid itself of the curse of strong drink. Americans are not the only ones who have gained this realization. The United States has set a high standard for itself and for every | smart they are.

civilized nation of the world, and the benefits which have already accrued are too great to make possible a return to the saloon.

There are signs which indicate that there is to be a new rallying to arms by those who will cheerfully and courageously answer to the call of duty. American citizens will not stand supinely by and be told that their sacred institutions can be seriously imperiled by an awkward squad of bootleggers and bottle carriers. These find no place among the marchers who follow the path of progress. They are merely the discredited guerrillas, or bushwhackers, despised by those who carry their campaigns into the open.

When the fact is noted that in the present theatrical season, scarcely under way as it is,

When a

Is Clean

there have been fortyfive plays or entertainments staged on Manhattan Island unfit for notice in The Christian Science Monitor, some idea of the sort of material offered to the public by New York managers may be gained. All the resources of literary and dramatic art have been enlisted in the service of sensualism and lubricity, and because a public seeking amusements takes what is offered, the managers sit back with the assertion that they are giving the public what

As a matter of fact, that is not what the public wants. Highly deleterious narcotic drugs are not what men want, but the unhappy individual who has been lured into taking them soon becomes their slave and thinks he is supplying his own wants when he is but ministering to his own vice. In the same way a theatrical public can be educated to the point of demanding the indecent, the salacious and the obscene, so that those who minister to its tastes are ever forced to more extreme endeavors to satisfy the vice they have themselves

But fundamentally this is not the kind of entertainment which the masses of theatergoers seek. Every now and then a clean play with a moral purpose, or a really artistic light opera, wins a large success and the managers wonder at it-and return to their bad manners.

The new comic opera, "The Student Prince," by Dorothy Donnelly and Sigmund Romberg, now playing at the Jolson Theater, New York, comes thus as a breath of glorious fresh air into the atmosphere of a theatrical season that has been all but stifling. Those who claim that the public wants the unsavory theatrical entertainment should go and see the crowds and hear them applaud and cheer when this performance of real worth is offered them. This new production completely refutes the idea that a performance must be risqué in order that it shall please the man about town. That individual, whoever he may be, will be among the stanchest supporters of this new

Here is another proof-if we must refer to the commercial side-of the oft repeated statement that in the long run the clean things of the theater are the ones that pay the best. The Shuberts, the authors and others immediately concerned are to be congratulated. But perhaps those who are interested in the welfare of mankind are most to be congratulated that there is thus manifested support for that which is wholesome in the theater.

Editorial Notes

In an editorial of scathing sarcasm, the New York Times recently declared that British hostility to prohibition is not wholly to be explained by the national passion for personal liberty. "The reason may be in part," it continued, "British respect for the law. Enactment of prohibition by Parliament would carry with it to the average British mind the implication that people ought to abstain from selling and buying liquor." Strange as it may seem to the Times, this is exactly what it conveys to the average citizen of the United States. While instances of law violation in connection with prohibition occur in America and are oftentimes given undue prominence in the newspapers, one should remember that occasionally also one reads in British newspapers of violations of moral regulations. Unfortunately, Great Britain is no nearer Utopia in this respect than is America.

So the children of today are spelling better than did their parents and grandparents, when they were boys and girls. This is the conclusion reached as a result of a state-wide contest recently carried on by the Boston University School of Education under the direction of Prof. Guy M. Wilson. The reason for this improvement is particularly interesting, as pointing to the method of education followed today in contrast to that followed forty or fifty years ago. It is, according to Professor Wilson, because attention is being directed to useful words, instead of merely catch spellings. The tendency of the age is undoubtedly toward practicality, and while the danger of swinging to an extreme is always to be guarded against, the more common sense and the less foolish abstraction that enters into educational activities the better on the whole for all concerned.

Though old "H. C. L." is constantly being abused for making it so difficult for Mr. Average Man to make both ends meet, latest reports from Paris show that an attempt to beat him at his own game did not meet with a kindly reception. It seems that a large provision dealer received an unusually big supply of fish the other day and decided that he would help the people by offering them at eighty-five centimes apiece. For two days, however, his sales were insignificant. His customers examined the fish, but although there was no question about their being perfectly fresh, they decided that they were too cheap to be good. On the third day, the dealer marked them up to a franc apiece. Every one was sold that day! Some people do like to show how

In Praise of Shaldon

Shaldon, in Devonshire, is one of those exciting places which can most adequately be described as "different." Even the cats and dogs notice it. No arched back and bristling fur: no noisy chase and frenzied ascent of a near-by tree trunk, but a friendly nose-to-nose snift, or at worst complete indifference when these alleged hereditary appears of the state of the sta hereditary enemies meet at Shaldon. No unfriendly glances, either, when there is no change in the till and the newly arrived visitor tenders a pound note in payment for a quarter of a pound of Devoushire cream, but a pleasant smile and, "Well, there—you'll be passing again before the week's out and you can pay me then."

Yes, Shaldon is indeed different.
Shaldon's main street is just wide enough for char-à-bancs. Its side streets are not. A Ford can get along one or two of them. Two people walking arm in arm fit fairly comfortably into most of the rest. In the remainder you must walk single file. Shaldon also has some Squares. The one I know best is called Corona-tion Square. Whose coronation, I cannot say. Perhaps it is George I's, for inside a cottage which forms one of the sides of the Square is a date-1716.

+ + + Not far from Coronation Square lives my friend, Mr. Willis, Mr. Willis is a chimney sweep. Every chimney in Shaldon knows Mr. Willis and not unnaturally Mr. Willis himself knows every chimney in Shaldon. I first met him when I went to fetch him to sweep our kitchen chimney. He said, "Teign View? Let me see, when did I sweep that chimney last?" Having taken off his cap and looked inside, he discovered that it was "a few months ago." So he agreed to come along and sweep it once more, though he evidently felt the chimney did not deserve it after such a short interval. Or, maybe he was thinking we did not know how to manage it, which in the end turned out to be only too true.

What time would Mr. Willis come to sweep our chimney? About six. But we were on a holiday and did not want to be awake by that time. Mr. Willis, however, was unmoved. "I can let myself in," he announced. Then seeing my questioning look, he went on: "Bless you, we don't have burglars in Shaldon. Scarce anyone ever Ain't got any use for keys, most of Mr. Willis let himself into Teign View next

As I said, not far from Coronation Square lives my friend, Mr. Willis. It was, in fact, from hard by this Square that I first asked the way to his house. There Square that I first asked the way to his house. There were two buxom ladies standing together. One had a pram, the other carried a baby. The one with the pram said, "Lucy, show the gentleman where Mr. Willis lives."

Little Lucy, aged about ten, appeared from behind her

Week-days is so vocal that you can hear his cry. "Ake —fresh 'a-a-ake, all alive-oi." from one end of Shaldon to the other, but that Sunday newspaper boy is as silent and elusive as the flight of a nightjar. After all, perhaps, it is only what one should expect, for Shaldon, as I said, at the beginning, is 'different."

mother's skirts, led the way past one house, down to the right past two more, then to the left past a fourth house, and there we were. Either she or her mother could have directed me in ten words, but then, you see they live in Shaldon. As we walked along, Lucy and I there followed us the sound of the voice of a third lads She was slim, tall and just out of her teens. She was singing to her baby—an old sweet-melodied Devon folk song.

Shaldon is full of babies, and fuller still of baby worshippers. Old men go down to the beach armed with bags of sweets. The lady who keeps the frommonger's shop in the main street forgets her customers and her customers forget her if a child comes in. There is a little guilty flutter, when the door opens and a new customer enters. "We're having a baby show," the lady behind the counter says apologetically. The next moment she is at it again. So is the new customer. The worst of the lot is Mr. Owens. Mr. Owens is ostensibly a grocer. He also has a large stock of sweets.

When a little girl goes into Mr. Owens' shop with a list of groceries for her mother, and end up by saying, "A penny stick of licorice," Mr. Owens says, 'Here you are, Maggie, my dear. And where's Tommy?" He's stayed at home today," replies Maggie, tendering her penny. "Better take him a stick, too," says Mr. Owens, giving her two penny sticks in exchange.

And the next day, when Tommy tacks on to the end of the grocery list, "a penn'orth of biscuits, please," not only does Mr. Owens know exactly which biscuits Tommy means, but he adds, "Better take some for Maggie, too, Tommy, nothing 10th, does so. In the in terest of Mr. Owens' pocket, paren's sometimes try the experiment of not sending their children on errands to Mr. Owens. But Mr. Owens' benevolence is not to be thwarted so easily. As soon as he sees the parents, he is sure to ask after the little ones, and having remembered them—well, you can guess what happens,

With all its simplicity, Shaldon possesses one mystery —the Sunday morning newspaper boy. He is the most elusive boy (if he is a boy) in the universe. I was at Shaldon for four Sundays, and never once could I caich him. He comes over in the ferry from Teignmouth, slinks up by-ways, rida himself of his papers to the privileged few who have discovered his habits, and slips away again. Mr. Loveridge with the fish barrow on week-days is so vocal that you can hear his cry

The World's Great Capitals: The Week in Paris

The total subscriptions to the French internal loan, it is now ascertained, reach 4,936,000,000 francs. M. Clementel declares that this represents a greater success than was anticipated. He expresses the utmost satisfaction with the result, which has surpassed his most optimistic expectations, demonstrating that the French people maintain full confidence in the finances of their Nation.

downfall of M. Briand. The French public could not believe that a golfer could be a serious diplomatist. But times are apparently changing. Diplomacy in future may be conducted on the golf links which are springing up about Paris. The Saint-Cloud Golf Club is promoting a diplomatic tournament. Perhaps the French public can be made to understand the game and not be suspicious of those statesmen who play it. Who knows whether the question of interallied debts, or the Geneva Protocol, or the entente cordiale, will not be decided with a mashie?

The midinettes are certainly the most light-hearted of French workers. Every year a day is set aside for them—Saint Catherine's Day—which they seem to spend chiefly in promenading arm-in-arm up and down the boulevards, laughing and singing and dancing to their heart's content. Everybody must make way for them, for they own Paris by right of gayety. Many of them don dainty bonnets of lace. All kinds of entertainments are arranged for them in the workrooms and in the halls of the city. The fairy queen of the Paris Mode 1925 was relacted on Saint Catherine's Pay. selected on Saint Catherine's Day.

But the greatest difficulty is being experienced in recruiting the ranks of the "midinettes." It is a poorly paid business, though Milady's dress is sold at extravapaid business, though Milady's dress is sold at extrava-gant prices. Instead of plying the needle the French girls are taking to typewriting. They not only find the work in offices better paid but more agreeable. The French fashion trade is becoming alarmed and is offer-ing all kinds of inducements to girls to learn the art of dressmaking. Nevertheless, in spite of its efforts, it. appears to be finding more and more difficulty in obtaining the necessary workers.

A number of wealthy foreigners and others who spend only a few months in Paris every year have kept their apartments closed. Now it is proposed that in view of the housing shortage a law should be passed compelling the letting of empty rooms. The municipal councilors, together with the prefect of police, are using their influence to provide that, when an apartment has been vacant for more than say, two months, a report must be made to the city authorities, who will then find responsible tenants. It is unpleasant to have one's apartment sub-let in one's absence, but on the other hand, it certainly seems unfair that, with so many people looking for flats, anyoody should have the right to keep a flat more or less permanently shut up.

It is strange to find Ernest Judet involved in the publication of the Notes touching the origin of the Great War, written by M. Georges Louis, the late French Ambassador in St. Petersburg. M. Louis was always regarded as a good ambassador, and it appears idle to attempt now to throw aspersions upon his ability. He was withdrawn from Russia before the war, and the allegation has always been made that his recall was due to his reluctance to pursue certain policies. He was in the habit of recording day by day conversations which he had with other diplo matists. Some of them undoubtedly make reflections upon M. Poincaré's conduct of affairs. To them M. Poincaré has replied effectively enough. But apart from this sensational aspect of the matter, the Notes are extremely interesting. M. Judet was formerly a well-known Paris editor. During the war he was sentenced in his absence to a term of imprisonment for high treason. When he came back to Paris he demanded a new trial, and was acquitted by a jury. He is now found to be editing the ambassadorial Notes as one of the executors of the will

It will be remembered that an entrance fee of one franc was charged some time ago for admission into the state museums and picture galleries. Now the French Parliament is asked to approve a project which will double the entrance fees. The Fine Arts Department believes that as the public is willing to pay one franc, it will not mind paying two francs. It is estimated that even on the one franc basis, 2,000,000 francs will be received this year, and this sum is sufficient to relieve the department from the acute financial embarrassment which it has suffered since the war. But the staff is insufficient, and sections of the Louvre, for example, have be closed on certain days because the number of attendants is inadequate.

There is another free commune in Paris. Montmartre was the first district to proclaim itself a separate repub-lic and to elect mock officials whose principal duty it was to parody the official ceremonies of greater Paris. Other quarters followed suit, including the Ile St. Louis in the Seine, which appointed a dogs and revived what it called Venetian Fêtes. Now Belleville is also declaring itself to be a "Commune Libre." Its president has received the title of Bidar I. It is, of course, all good fun and does nobody any harm. There is no interference with the serious business of life, but the self-appointed officials promote all kinds of festivities.

+ + + The International Women's Congress, which was held at Paris, was placed under the honorary presidency of Mme. Herriot, the wife of the French Prime Minister.

She deserved this honor, for a large part of her life has been given up to philanthropic work and in the advance-ment of the cause of women. She has undoubtedly recog-nized the beauty of unselfish service. .4 4 4

An aerial mono-railway between Paris and the sub-urbs is to be established. The scheme has been long investigated. It was put forward by M. Francis Laur. a French engineer. His idea was to provide this form of transport between the Porte de la Chapelle on the northern side of the city, and St. Denis. A committee of the municipal council has now reported in its favor. The rails will be fifteen yards above the ground. If the experiment succeeds, Paris will undoubtedly be linked up with other suburban centers such as St. Germain, Sceaux, Fontenay-sous-Bois, and Le Raincy, in the same manner. 4 4 4

Russia is to take an official part in the Decorative Arts Exhibition which opens next year in Paris. This decision is regarded as of some significance. Belgium also is particularly interested. The allies, including the British and the Italians, will be grouped together in an excellent position between the Grand Palais and the Port Alexandre III. The building operations which were begun some time ago are proceeding well in advance of the time-table, and if all goes well the preparations should be completed before long. 4 4 4

The children of the primary schools are to be shown the beauties and the historic features of Paris. The organization which has taken this matter in hand is working on generous and practical lines. There is to be a series of promenades through the city on the weekly school holidays-Thursdays and Sundays-under the guidance of a group of teachers. The younger children will be taken to the woods and parks, but the older children will be shown the palaces, the monuments, the churches and the notable houses of the capital.

Christmas Tree Conservation

To the Editor of The Christian Science Monitor My attention has been called several times to articles in the Monitor on the conservation of America's trees, and therefore I am sending you a few thoughts on the At each Christmas season beautiful young trees are brought by the carload into the cities for commercial purposes. They are thrown down on sidewalks or stacked up along walks. We ask: Why cut down so many fit trees when there are none to spare? or rather: Why employ them for useless decorations? How much more beautiful was the live tree on the hillside, growing in all its natural grace—in summer, glowing in its heavy green foliage; in winter, festooned with snowy garments—than the bedizened tree in a crowded room. Is there not a better way of celebrating the birth of the Christ child than by devastating the country of these wonderful children of the woods, which after being enjoyed for a few hours are discarded and thrown away as no longe: of the slightest value? Not so many years ago, I visited after Christmas hillside where previously there had been a clump of young fir trees, and to my dismay not one was left standing. They had all been sacrificed during the Christmas There is a movement on foot for reforestation and conservation of the trees. This is splendid. It would be a good idea to have the children share in this. Teach them to co-operate with lovers of nature in saving the Nation's beautiful evergreen trees.

The Opposite Point of View To the Editor of The Christian Science Monitor:

While I fully appreciate the point of view of those who are today urging that the ages-old custom of deco-rated fir trees should be discontinued at Christmas time, on the ground that the waste that is thereby incurred is unjustifiable, I feel that I must put in a word for the We have the authority of the American Tree Association, than which there is probably no organization more devoted to the conservation of the forests of the United States, for the statement that the sum total of fir trees cut for Christmas tree decorations constitutes an infinitesimal part of the annual cut from the Nation's forests. Moreover, Mr. Pack, the president of this organ ization, has specifically gone on record to the effect that "Conservation means proper use, and what better use of a small tree than to give joy to children?" And that Christmas trees do give joy to children, there is no denying, despite all allegations to the contrary.

Moreover, it is only fair to give consideration to the fact that a judicious thinning of these trees is absolutely necessary to their proper development. Not every Christmas tree by any means represents a loss of so much tim ber to the Nation.

Granting, however, that a few mountain slopes are denuded in certain sections of America; has it ever been computed how many hearts have been gladdened thereby? There are two sides to every question, and in this instance it is proper to consider the children's point of view as well as that of the so-called conservationists, especially when the children's point of view has the foresters behind it SUBSCRIBER,
